The TreeHouse chain celebrates Founder's Day with an emphasis on offline, interactive activities

The festivities marked the end of pandemic-related restrictions with puppet shows and multiple art and craft activities

In July, educationist and founder Rajesh Bhatia belated heart-warming and joyous celebrations across the TreeHouse chain of schools on the occasion of Founder's Day. He said, "This time the emphasis was on celebrating the fact that children were finally free to socialise after two years of pandemic-related restrictions. This was also an opportunity to remember that TreeHouse was founded to initiate a welcoming, affordable, inclusive model of education that would facilitate all-around development of students by blending academics, arts, sports, creativity, and life skills. I feel we have achieved that though there are many more goals and milestones waiting for us."

During the weeklong celebrations, budding artists of the middle sections made fridge magnets and painted T-shirts while the seniors made sock puppets, greeting cards and a lot more. On July 30, the students and teachers also celebrated the birthday of Rajesh Bhatia who has been the force behind the online and offline model that has now expanded to over 41 branches across India.

Says Rajesh Bhatia, "I felt humbled by the love I received this week but it was even more fulfilling to see the way our community of teachers has committed itself to the holistic development of students. Together, we are doing our best to develop the innate potential of our students, be it in academics, arts, or sports."

In an interactive session with the students, Mr. Bhatia also shared a few life lessons and provided insights about the future of education in the post-Covid era. Bhatia emphasized that the time of new learning is over and educational institutions must adapt to a fast-evolving world. This is why TreeHouse has adopted a hybrid system of online and offline education that combined with field trips, a mix of Play Way and Montessori methods and even courses on vocational skills helps prepare the students for the future.
